MAURITIUS DEBRIS TO BE LOOKED AT BY MH370 INVESTIGATORS

In Australia said that a piece of suspected airplane debris found east of Africa on a Mauritian island will be examined to see if it is part of Malaysia Airlines Flight 370, which went missing two years ago in one of the world's greatest aviation mysteries. A hotel owner on the island who saw the debris said it looked like it was from the inside of a plane, with what he thought was a wallpaper "design," which if confirmed, would be the first piece of interior debris from the plane yet to be found. Australia has led the search for the plane, which went missing in March 2014 with 239 people on board on a flight from the Malaysian capital, Kuala Lumpur, to Beijing, and Transport Minister Darren Chester said the debris, found last week, was an "item of interest." REUTERS

BARRON'S ENDORSES KASICH FOR PRESIDENT

2 Calling him "the best hope for investors who want a Republican in the White House," Barron's announced its support for Ohio Gov. John Kasich for president with a front-page editorial in its latest hard-copy edition. Barron's had previously endorsed Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton as a preferred choice over the current front-runner for the Republican Party's presidential nomination, Donald Trump, but in its editorial the weekly newspaper said that Kasich, "outshines them both." "Unlike Clinton, Kasich has a sensible across-the-board tax-cutting agenda for corporations, individuals, and investors," the editorial written by Barron's executive editor, John Kimmelman, said. "And as a Republican president working with a presumably GOP-controlled Congress, he would be a more effective leader." REUTERS

TESLA SAYS MODEL 3 ORDERS TOP $10B IN FIRST 36 HOURS

3 Tesla Motors Inc. said orders for its new Model 3 electric sedan topped 253,000 in the first 36 hours — a fast start for the company's first mass-market vehicle, which may not begin to reach customers for another 18 months or more. Tesla Chief Executive Elon Musk tweeted on Friday that the Model 3, which is slated to go into production in late 2017, will sell at an average price of $42,000, including the price of options and additional features, which would give the initial flurry of orders an estimated retail value of $10.6 billion. That intense interest, fanned in part by a steady stream of tweets by Musk, could help boost Tesla's stock price, which closed Friday at $237.59, up 3.4 percent. REUTERS

BOARIS' WEATHER WATCH: THROWING OUT SNOWBALLS INSTEAD OF BASEBALLS

Bolaris' Weather Watch

This is going to be one wild April week, with extremes in temperatures and precipitation. If you want to talk about the full weather gamut ranging from rain to snow, from freeze to warmth, this week will have it. And by looking at the long-range models, April might turn out to be colder than March.

It's also the opening week for the baseball season. The New York Yankees have their home opener today and the rain falling this afternoon could change over to wet snow towards game's end. It could be worse: Back on April 6, 1982, the game was cancelled due to a full-blown blizzard — really baseball season in the Northern states should not start until May 1. I've been advocating this for years as the fans suffer the most.

You'll be freezing your plants off come Tuesday morning as the mercury drops into Januarylike levels back down into the 20s and crops, if not protected, and tender plants could suffer major damage.

On Wednesday morning, expect more widespread freeze and frost across the entire Northeast, but temperatures will start to rise back into the seasonably cool 50s. At the same time a more southerly flow on Thursday will send readings back to the unseasonably mild side along with a pretty good chance of widespread heavy showers and storms developing.

Record cold to strike this Friday into Saturday.

A record setting Arctic air mass will invade the entire Northeast during this time frame as temperatures come Friday night and again on Saturday night will spiral down into the teens with some of the

New markings at North Station guide commuters on the T on the finer points of mass transit manners. CERIK NOLYOUNIAN

North Station markings teach T's unwritten rule for boarding trains

It's the T's latest lesson in etiquette.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

An unwritten rule for those waiting on crowded subway platforms to board crowded trains: stand off to the side, let the on-train riders get off, then make your way inside.

Trying to cram oneself through as soon as the doors open can lead to human traffic jams and slow things down for everyone, as most commuters know.

Fed up with people who ride the MBTA without following this bit of public transit good form?

Apparently, so is the T. The has agency rolled out some new markings on subway platforms designed to teach commuters the right way to board, reports The Boston Globe.

Red and green arrows have appeared at the busy North Station to direct riders to stand in their proper places when the train arrives. They will be coming soon to State Street as part of a pilot program to increase efficiency on the T and speed up boarding times. They could become permanent and spread to more stations, according to The Globe.

This isn't the first time the T has addressed subway faux pas.

Etiquette on the T has been a focus of the MBTA's Transit Police department over the past few years, and its Twitter feed at this point is a silo of public transit no-nos, from the illegal to the discourteous to the bizarre.

In a recent example, the MBTA Transit Police tweeted a picture of a shoeless passenger lounging on two-and-a-quarter seats.

Police: Woman sold heroin stamped with 'Donald Trump' logo

Darcie Rae Hall, 36, was arrested by police in New Hampshire this week

CHRIS CAESAR
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

A New Hampshire woman is under arrest after police said she sold two bags of heroin to a confidential informant last week — curiously, both stamped with Donald Trump logos.

Darcie Rae Hall, 36, of Troy, New Hampshire, was arrested by detectives after a monthlong investigation by the state's drug task force, the Union Leader reported.

Hall allegedly sold the bags on March 24 and 28. She was later pulled over on the second date while driving north on Route 12 in Troy, according to the report.

She remains held on on $2,000 bail.

Police searched her home and car, but continue to investigate.

Chelmsford man arrested after suspicious devices found near power lines

A Chelmsford man with a history of feuding with telecommunications companies was arrested on Saturday as part of an FBI probe into a series of suspicious devices found near power lines in a small town near the New Hampshire border.

Danny Kelly, 61, was arrested at his home on Saturday morning, the FBI said.

Kelly, who was arrested on probable cause related to the investigation, will be charged on Monday, said Christina Dilorio-Sterling, a spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office in Massachusetts.

Local police and fire departments responded on Thursday to a brush fire near a power line in Tyngsboro, about 30 miles northwest of Boston and found an unspecified number of devices that they said resembled pipe bombs near transmission lines operated by National Grid. The devices were determined to be flammable but not explosive and posed no threat to the public, the FBI said.

It was not immediately clear if Kelly had hired an attorney.

Kelly pleaded guilty in 2005 to extortion for cutting communication cables operated by Comcast Corp. and Verizon Communications Inc., demanding $10,000 monthly payments to stop, federal court records show.

US says it killed ISIS militant who killed Marine in Iraq

The anti-Islamic State coalition conducting airstrikes in Iraq and Syria has killed the IS militant believed responsible for an attack on U.S. troops in northern Iraq last month that left a Marine dead, it said on Sunday.

Militant Jasim Khadijah, a former Iraqi officer not considered a high-value target, was killed by a drone strike overnight in northern Iraq, coalition spokesman U.S. Army Col. Steve Warren told reporters in Baghdad.

"We have information (that) he was a rocket expert, he controlled these attacks," said Warren, referring to the shelling of a base used by U.S. troops near the town of Makhmour, located between Mosul and Kirkuk.

That attack killed Marine Staff Sergeant Louis Cardin and wounded eight others, all part of a company-sized detachment of less than 200 troops. They provide force protection fire to Iraqi army troops, who are making slow progress in a campaign to clear areas around Mosul, an IS stronghold.

Cardin's was the second combat death of an American service member in Iraq since the start of the campaign to fight the militant group in 2014.

Warren said five other Islamic State fighters were killed in the air strike. REUTERS

UN audit identifies serious lapses linked to alleged bribery

The 21-page confidential report by the U.N. Office of Internal Oversight Services, reviewed by Reuters, outlines the results of an audit ordered by Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon in response to charges against John Ashe, General Assembly president in 2013-2014, and six other people.

Headquarters of the United Nations GETTY IMAGES

The United Nations' internal investigations office has uncovered serious lapses in the world body's interaction with organizations tied to an alleged bribery scheme involving a former U.N. General Assembly president.

The 21-page confidential report by the U.N. Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), reviewed by Reuters, outlines the results of an audit ordered by Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon in response to charges against John Ashe, General Assembly president in 2013-2014, and six other people.

The report gave the U.N. an overall grade of "partially satisfactory" in the March 22 report, which is available to U.N.

member states on request. It noted "important deficiencies" in the way United Nations and its staff interacted with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and oversees U.N. employees.

It is the biggest financial corruption crisis to rock the United Nations since the Oil-for-Food scandal hit the world body during the tenure of Ban's predecessor Kofi Annan. U.N. officials and diplomats say latest scandal highlights the need for greater transparency at the United Nations.

OIOS recommended improvements in internal U.N. risk management and controls in light of the irregularities uncovered - a U.N. document improperly altered, travel expenses paid by NGOs against U.N. guidelines, U.N. employees keeping iPads given to them by an NGO headed by an indicted individual.

OIOS urged Ban to ensure that any outside organizations the U.N. deals with are properly vetted. It also said that the U.N. should review any continuing relations with NGOs linked to the indictment.

The audit came in response to an ongoing U.S. investigation that has since October resulted in charges against seven people including Ashe, a former U.N. ambassador from Antigua and Barbuda.

U.S. prosecutors say Ashe received $1.3 million in bribes from Chinese businessmen including Ng Lap Seng, a billionaire real estate developer who heads Macau-based Sun Kian Ip Group and was seeking to build a U.N.-sponsored conference center in Macau.

Francis Lorenzo, a suspended deputy U.N. ambassador from the Dominican Republic who prosecutors said helped facilitate Ng's bribes and received bribes himself, pleaded guilty in March and agreed to cooperate with U.S. authorities. Sheri Yan, chief executive of Global Sustainability Foundation, a New York-based NGO, and Heidi Hong Piao, its finance director, accused of facilitating bribes to Ashe, pleaded guilty in January. Julia Vivi Wang has not yet entered a plea, and Ng's assistant Jeff Yin pleaded not guilty.

Attorneys for those charged either did not respond or declined to comment when contacted by Reuters. A spokesman for the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office also declined to comment.

U.N. spokesman Stephane Dujarric said that while the Secretary-General was glad that the audit found many controls working properly, the flagged procedural lapses were a concern.

"Instructions reinforcing the correct procedures with respect to document issuance have been issued to the Departments and Offices concerned," Dujarric said. REUTERS

Trump's prediction of 'massive recession' puzzles economists

In an interview with the Washington Post, he said a combination of high unemployment and an overvalued stock market had set the stage for another economic slump.

Donald Trump's prediction that the U.S. economy was on the verge of a "very massive recession" hit a wall of skepticism on Sunday from economists who questioned the Republican presidential front-runner's calculations.

"We're not heading for a recession, massive or minor, and the unemployment rate is not 20 percent," said Harm Bandholz, chief U.S. economist at UniCredit Research in New York.

The official unemployment rate has declined to 5 percent from a peak of 10 percent in October 2009, according to government statistics. But a different, broader measure of unemployment that includes people who want to work but have given up searching and those working part-time because they cannot find full-time employment is at 9.8 percent.

"I think we're sitting on an economic bubble. A financial bubble," Trump said. While calling it a bubble might be a stretch, the fall in corporate profits and the recent rally in stock prices has pushed up the market's valuation, and stocks on balance are about 15 percent pricier at the moment than their long-term average valuation.

But a cataclysmic economic downturn originating in the United States appears to be a remote possibility. REUTERS

CHEESEHEAD ALERT!

Candidates love coming up with cheesy slogans so this week they should feel at home as Wisconsin holds its presidential primaries. But the savvy Cheeseheads are a tough crowd, not easily taken in by smooth talking politicians. All eyes in D.C. are looking west where we find my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. LIKE A BADGER

Bernie Sanders is hanging on with a tenacity well-suited to the Badger State. Polls suggest he has a good shot at winning there, and that means Hillary Clinton will have to keep dividing her forces: fending off his challenge while simultaneously trying to turn her attention to the Republicans. She has already bristled on camera at some members of the Bernie Army for pressing her at public events — and they'd love to provoke more of the same. Keep an eye out for more Bernsters trying to prod her into a street fight, while their man keeps grinding away at her lead.

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the new book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

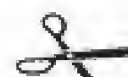

2. CRUZ CONTROL

Ted Cruz keeps trailing Donald Trump in the Republican contest — but with everyone but John Kasich out of the race, Cruz is finally close to the two man fight he wanted. He's hitting Wisconsin with everything, hoping to score with evangelicals. But what you really need to watch is the #AnyoneButTrump movement. If Cruz can get that fire burning hotter, it could engulf a lot of voters and give Trump his first serious worries in this race.

3. DAMAGE CONTROL

Speaking of Trump, everyone knows he's been — to borrow a phrase — the Teflon Don. He's said things that would have destroyed any typical candidate. But did you notice all the land mines he stepped on last week? More importantly, did you notice his quick steps to tamp down the turmoil that followed? Looks to me like Trump is making a pivot; he may still say outlandish things, but he's started cleaning up the messes much more quickly. Don't just watch the vote. Watch for movement in his approval ratings to see if it is working.

Drew Barrymore headed to divorce court

Well, that was quick. Drew Barrymore and Will Kopelman have confirmed reports that they are divorcing after almost four years of marriage. "Sadly our family is separating legally, although we do not feel this takes away from us being a family," the pair said in a joint statement to People magazine.

"Divorce might make one feel like a failure, but eventually you start to find grace in the idea that life goes on." Hey, who are you trying to convince here? "Our children are our universe, and we look forward to living the rest of our lives with them as the first priority," the statement adds. Those children are daughters Olive, 3, and Frankie, 1, who will most likely continue to live in New York City, extremely nosey sources assure us.

Mischa Barton develops a bad rep on 'DWTS'

Former "The O.C." star Mischa Barton is not doing too great on "Dancing with the Stars," neither on camera nor behind the scenes, according to Radar Online. Just how bad are things getting? "Mischa is just not coming off as a nice person. It is really quite unfortunate because when she first came on the show, members of the cast and crew said they were hoping that she was going to be the person that they used to love watching on TV," a source says. Yeah, about that: "Some people are claiming that Mischa is the most self-entitled and rude celebrity that the employees of the show have ever had to work with," the source explains. "She does not discriminate who she is rude to either." I mean, considering the list of "stars" who have been on that show, that's really saying something. But hey, a title is a title, right?

Bradley Cooper brought his mom to see Guns N' Roses

Noted Hollywood nice guy Bradley Cooper has made a habit of bringing his mom along as his date for big events — awards shows, film festivals, etc. — but this might be going a step too far. When Guns N' Roses announced their surprise show at the Troubadour in L.A. Friday night — the first show featuring Axl

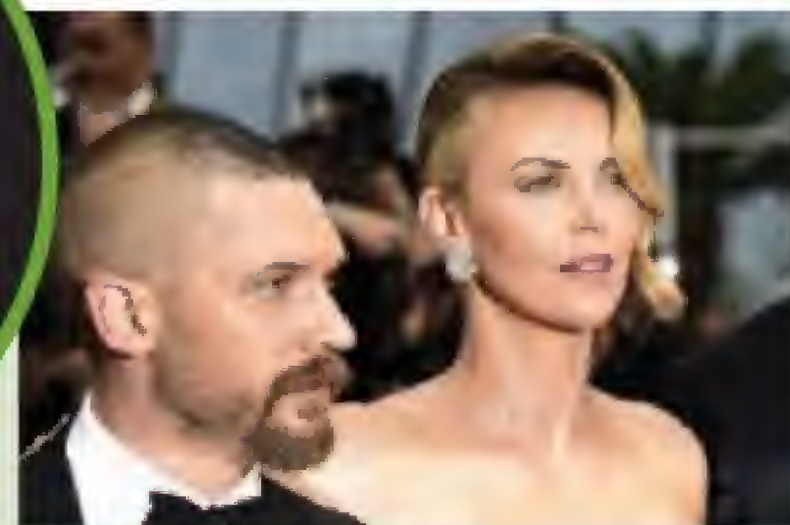

Rose and guitarist Slash together in more than 22 years — Cooper had only one person in mind to take along as his plus-one: mom Gloria Campano. Which is sweet and all, but shouldn't it have given the rest of the crowd pause? Like, is a Guns N' Roses reunion really so cool if Bradley Cooper is bringing his mom to it? No word yet on whether Campano plans on following the band around all summer on tour, but fingers crossed.

Charlize Theron is glad she didn't get along with Tom Hardy

It's no secret by now that "Mad Max: Fury Road" co-stars Charlize Theron and Tom Hardy did not get along — not at all. Theron has been very candid about their cattiness, even revealing last year that Hardy had given her a self-portrait as a wrap gift that contained the message, "You are an absolute nightmare, but you are also f—ing awesome. I'll kind of miss you." Well, looking back now, Theron thinks it was all worth it. "From what I hear, he's not like that on every movie. I hear he's had good experiences," she tells WSJ magazine. "Maybe the movie is what it is because we struggled so much with each other, and those characters had to struggle so much with each other. If we were chum-chum, maybe the movie would have been 10 times worse." That's some impressive looking-on-the-bright-side kind of thinking right there, ma'am.

Most couples do part of the prep for their nuptials on the job.

ALIZAH SALARIO
alizah.salario@metro.us

With wedding season just around the corner, many couples are gearing up to tie the knot. And because wedding planning is like gas — it expands to fill every nook and cranny of empty space — brides and grooms-to-be organizing their own nuptials will find wedding-related tasks seeping into work hours. Especially future brides.

Nine in 10 women say they put some company time into planning their wedding, and 90 percent of brides said their fiances devoted less time to wedding planning than they did, according to a survey from Forbes and TheKnot.com.

Dr. Amanda Miller, a professor of sociology at the University of Indianapolis, says this gender divide can make it harder for working women to balance their jobs with wedding prep.

"Women are getting married at older ages than in the past, which likely means they are in jobs that have higher levels of responsibility," she says. "Your 30s is often when [you're] more indispensable in the workplace."

If your job is helping to fund the big day, the balancing act can be particularly stressful. Here are a few tips for working women who want to avoid a pre-wedding meltdown.

Know what you're up against

Recognizing the cultural factors that shape expectations about gender and weddings is crucial.

"The pressure to plan a big extravaganza probably came about after the Princess Diana [wedding] in 1981," says Dr. Katherine Jellison, author of "It's Our Day: America's Love Affair With the White Wedding, 1945-2005" and history department chair at Ohio University. "After that, we saw the increase in average people spending a lot of time and money and effort creating wedding spectacles."

Another reason women bear the brunt of planning is the notion of "kin-keeping," says Miller. "Kin-keeping is really this idea of keeping family relationships tied together, and that's almost always considered to be women's work. Weddings are an extension of kin-keeping — it's a big family event, and usually it's considered women's work to get the family together."

Get organized and delegate responsibility

For type-A individuals who want to excel in all they do, planning poses a unique challenge. "You have a group of women who seem to be super-women," says Miller. "They're good in the workforce, and they're good in their home lives, and one of the things that will help them throw the weddings they want is organization. Start a binder, start a website where you and your groom or bride can check responsibilities and keep lists of places to call."

That being said, don't be afraid to ask for help. "It's like when people are ill or they have a life crisis, the advice is always to take people up on their offers to help," says Jellison. "Especially if you're sort of looking at this as a life crisis — balancing your work life and your wedding planning life — take people up on their offers of assistance, either in planning the wedding or in taking on tasks at work."

Know when to unplug

Sites like Pinterest and Etsy have ostensibly made wedding planning easier and vendors more approachable. But constant accessibility isn't necessarily a time saver, suggests Jellison.

"It reminds me of the argument early in the 20th century that if women had all the right electrical appliances in their household, housework would take up less time, and then just the opposite happened: You had all the equipment that was supposed to make it easier, so tasks that you maybe did once a week you did everyday, like wash the clothes.

And so technological innovation might change the labor involved, but it often times extends the amount of time involved," says Jellison.

Take it in stride, and plan accordingly

Wedding planning ebbs and flows, says Miller. "There tends to be a flurry of activity that happens shortly after the engagement, and there seems to be a lot of down time in the middle, and then a flurry again at the end. So a suggestion for working women is to keep those timelines in mind, when the wedding activities will be most strenuous, and see if you can plan big work projects accordingly."

Lastly, keep things in perspective. Says Miller, "Just know that something inevitably will go wrong, and that might end up being your favorite part of the entire experience."

Sox have lots of 'ifs,' big expectations

Red Sox return in 2016 with enough pitching and hitting to do some damage.

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

Baseball is back. The Red Sox will open the 2016 season Monday afternoon in Cleveland against the Indians where David Price will make his Red Sox debut. It was a busy offseason for the team with the Price signing, as well as additions in the bullpen in Craig Kimbrel and Carson Smith.

It was also an eventful spring training capped off with manager John Farrell announcing Travis Shaw will start at third base over Pablo Sandoval.

Here is a look at what to expect this season offensively and from the mound.

Offense

finished in last place in the AL East last season, the offense wasn't the issue. In the American League the Red Sox were fourth in runs scored and fourth in average. They also will return almost everyone and their young players have another year of experience under their belts.

In the infield, Hanley Ramirez will likely have a better season than last year, especially if he stays healthy. Dustin Pedroia is hoping for a bounce back year after being plagued by injuries in 2015. Xander Bogaerts will continue to get better with age and the biggest thing for him is raising his home run total, as he had just seven last season. Shaw will hope to build on his 13 home runs in 65 games last season, while Sandoval will hope to crack the starting lineup and improve on his .245 average last season.

In the outfield it appears Brock Holt and Chris Young will platoon in left field, while Jackie Bradley Jr. and Mookie Betts will start in center and right field respectively. This leaves Rusney Castillo coming off the bench, which is a bit surprising given he may be better off starting the year in Triple-A to build confidence and possibly his trade value.

Pitching

From the mound it starts with Price, who will obviously bolster the Red Sox rotation, but there is reason for concern behind him. Eduardo Rodriguez will start the season on the disabled list. Clay Buchholz will be the No. 2 starter, but as always durability is a question with him. Joe Kelly will be the third starter, but he was inconsistent last season and even was sent back to Triple-A at one point. Rick Porcello and his $20 million a year contract will be the No. 4 starter as he hopes to come back strong after a difficult first year in Boston, while knuckleballer Steven Wright will be the fifth starter.

The bullpen will be much better than last year, but there is trouble to start the year as Smith will miss a few weeks with an elbow injury. Kimbrel will take over the closer's role and Koji Uehara will primarily work before Smith, but will likely be the setup man until Smith returns. Matt Barnes, Robbie Ross Jr. and Noe Ramirez will be the middle relievers, all who gained valuable major league experience last year.

BURKE: OLD MAN ORTIZ CHANGED BOSTON AND THE RED SOX FOREVER

You know you're getting old when there are reflection shows on TV and music tours revolving around the decade in which you grew up.

JaRule and Treach playing this Friday at the House of Blues?? Sign me up!

While the typical shelf life of a pop culture figure lasts 2-3 years, iconic athletes thankfully have longer periods in the spotlight. But we're getting to a point in sports history right now where it's really kind of funny to think about guys having played in the 1990s. There's a reason why Kevin Garnett is grandpa in those "Meet the Hoopers" commercials, after all, and there's a reason why everyone thought Paul Pierce's career was over when he fell down and went boom against the Celtics this past week.

And those clips they show once in a while of Tom Brady throwing touchdown passes while a member of the Michigan Wolverines? There's a reason why there are black bars on both sides of your television screen for those. A good chunk of Brady's career in the national spotlight was played in a non-HD world, of course.

David Ortiz has been playing Major League Baseball since 1997 for God's sake. For reference, that was before anyone outside of the Oval Office knew of the name "Monica Lewinsky." That was a time when Donald Trump had only three corporate bankruptcies to his name. Michael Jordan was a year away from retiring (for the second, but not final time). Peyton Manning and Brady hadn't even thrown a football in the NFL yet. And Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa were a season away from having a steroid-fueled home run chase.

In other words, David Ortiz is as old as the Fenway dirt.

And you might have heard

— this 2016 season will be Ortiz's last.

He got his MLB start in Minnesota — playing there from 1997-2002. But he didn't become "Big Papi" until he arrived in Boston in 2003 — the season in which he split time with Jason Giambi's forgettable brother, and Kevin Millar.

"Big Papi" changed Boston sports forever. For the better.

During the early 2000s, things were looking up here sports-wise, sure. The Patriots had won it all in February of 2002 and there were hints that that Bill Belichick guy might actually know what he's doing. But make no mistake — Boston was still defined as a "baseball town" then, and by the lovable loser role of the hometown nine Red Sox.

So, "clutch" was not exactly a word associated with the city at that time despite the Pats' upset win over the Rams.

Ortiz altered the narrative here, however. Forever.

By batting .409 in the 2004 playoffs, by hitting a walk-off homer to beat the Angels in the ALDS of that year, by hitting a walk-off homer in Game 4 against the Yankees that year, by hitting a walk-off single in the 14th of Game 5 against the Yankees that year, by hitting a Red Sox record 54 homers in 2006, by hitting .370 in the playoffs in 2007, by hitting two home runs off of Tampa Bay's David Price in Game 2 of the ALDS in 2013, by hitting a game-tying grand slam against the Tigers in Game 2 of the ALCS in 2013, by hitting home runs against the Cardinals in both Game 1 and Game 2 of the World Series in 2013 and by reminding the city of Boston that they were strong with a literal "F-U" to terrorism in the spring of 2013 — Ortiz changed the narrative here. Forever.

David Ortiz is not the best athlete in the history of this city. But no athlete flipped the script of this city like him.

It's 2016 now, and Ortiz is an old man. But we get the next six (maybe seven) months to send him off in style.

Aries Avoid encounters with people who curtail your creativity or ability to enjoy life. Put yourself first and look out for people with ulterior motives. Stay active and focused.

Taurus Join forces with a like-minded person who shares your aspirations. Personal information is best kept a secret to avoid outside interference.

Gemini When it comes to questionable situations, protect your reputation and your heart. Excessive behavior by you or your friends will create problems.

Cancer Deal with emotional situations quickly, using innovative solutions that will appease everyone involved. Romance will bring you closer to someone special.

Leo Meet interesting people from different walks of life. Travel, learning and personal change will broaden your outlook and help you set your plans in motion.

Virgo Keep an open mind, but don't feel you have to follow the crowd. An emotional situation will cause uncertainty at home or with someone you feel responsible for.

Libra Devote your time to a moneymaking endeavor. Use your creative skills to rework an old idea to fit current trends. A partnership will form with someone quite unexpected.

Scorpio If you face any challenge you meet head-on, you will be surprised by your ability to wheel and deal. Romance is highlighted and will improve your emotional well-being.

Sagittarius Don't be afraid to do your own thing at a pace you feel comfortable with. Set your own deadlines and don't worry about what everyone else is doing.

Capricorn Don't lose sight of what's happened in the past. Utilize experience to help you rearrange personal and professional goals. Don't rely on others.

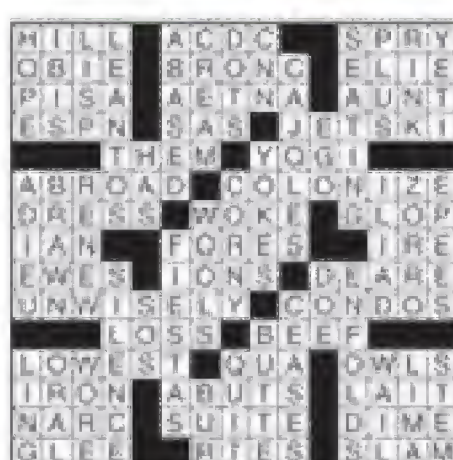

Aquarius Get together with people from way back when. If you attend a reunion or reconnect on the Internet, memories will prompt you to resurrect some of your intentions.

Pisces Keep a tight rein on your holdings. Don't share secrets that might be misinterpreted or used against you. Concentrate on personal change. EUGENIA LAST
